Just in case you didn't already, the Grammys are basically the Oscars of the hip-hop community. They celebrate that community with a pre-award show, a big ceremony, and a ton of awards. In this, the year of Kendrick Lamar, Pusha T, and Eminem, there were three rap-dominated nominations that you can bet on Grammy voters calling a favor. Adele won the Album of the Year Grammy, Beyoncé got the Grammy for Best Pop Vocal Album, and Eminem was named the Godfather of Rap. Obviously, all three winners got a wacky acceptance speech from, well, Adele, Beyoncé, and Eminem. In her speech, Adele thanked Beyoncé, who is not a big Grammy winner but the clear front-runner for Album of the Year. Despite taking three of the top four slots, Beyoncé only got a standing ovation and no new awards. Beyoncé's part in a pre-taped performance of "Formation" was far from her only bit of for-the-conspiracy kibbitzing. As previously mentioned, you have to fill in some simple details to generate the RSA keys. These include the name and key prefix, NYM name, key expiration (1, 2 or 3 years), key length and passphrase (should be over 27 characters). The key can be generated with one click, and RSA Key Generator pops up a console window to show you gathered information. It is also possible to export the public key to a pubkey.asc file.
